Masala Code
ሪገገገገ ተጊጊጊ

A Pocket Book of Spirits,
Memories & Mischief.

About the बार, At Masala Code,

A bar is never just about pouring drinks. It is a gathering ground, a witness stand, a stage where stories unfold. At Masala Code, we wanted the bar to be exactly that, not a corner where you park yourself between courses, but the beating heart of the space.

Every bottle here has been chosen with intent. You'll find Indian craft spirits that are rewriting the rules of drinking, wines grown under our own sun, and whiskies that have seen generations raise a glass. Alongside them sit global names, bottles that have travelled across oceans, bringing with them the stories of distilleries and cultures far from Indore, yet somehow right at home here.

The philosophy of our kitchen is rooted in memory, but restless in execution carries forward into the bar. Our cocktails experiment with heritage, our pours honor classics, and our shelves invite curiosity. Whether you're chasing the comfort of a familiar whisky, or the thrill of a gin distilled in Goa, this bar is meant to feel like an index of possibilities.

Pull up a chair, flip through this directory, and let the night be what it wants to be; loud, quiet, celebratory, or contemplative.

The bar at Masala Code doesn't just serve drinks. It collects moments.

Indian Spirits

For a long time, India was dismissed as just a drinking nation, a land of whisky loyalists, rum nostalgists, and gin-and-tonic drinkers who inherited the habit from colonial officers. But to reduce India to consumption alone would be unfair. We've always been distillers, fermenters, and makers, our backyards brimmed with toddy, mahua, arrack, feni, and rice beers long before Scotch or Bordeaux were household names. What has changed in the last two decades is visibility: India has gone from being a thirsty market to a serious player in the global spirits conversation.

Walk into our bar today and you'll find bottles that no longer whisper "Made in India" apologetically on their labels; they shout it with confidence. Our gins carry Himalayan juniper that taste like the spice route itself in liquid form. Our vodkas, once an afterthought, are now crafted with precision from Indian grains and spring water, distilled to the same clarity and crispness that Eastern Europe once monopolized. Our rums still carry the weight of nostalgia; Old Monk for some, navy traditions for others; but they now share the stage with new-age coastal distillers reimagining sugarcane.

The jewel in the crown, of course, is Indian whisky. India drinks more whisky than any other country on earth, and for decades it was blends built for quantity. But now? Indian single malts are winning global awards, thanks to unique monsoon ageing that accelerates character. To call these simply "Indian versions of global categories" would be to miss the point. What we're witnessing is the birth of a distinct Indian style.

Because of Sula's success, Nashik transformed from a town famous for onions and grapes into the "Wine Capital of India." Now more than 50 wineries operate in the region.

Fratelli has experimented with planting vines in Rajasthan's sandy soils to test if Indian "desert wines" could be a thing.

The first time American whiskey entered Indian nightlife, it wasn't on a bar shelf, it was in a rock band's rider. Jack Daniel's, with its black label, became shorthand for rebellion and youth culture. Over time, bourbon's sweeter notes and rye's spice became the bartender's tools. Today, American whiskey isn't the rebel outsider anymore, it's part of the family, just the cousin who still wears leather jackets to weddings.

DID YOU KNOW?

Norway's Linie Aquavit is a potato-based caraway spirit with a unique voyage. Every drop is loaded onto ships in oak casks and sent to cross the equator twice before being sold. The rolling seas, shifting climates, and constant temperature changes draw out deep flavors from the wood, making the ocean itself part of the recipe.

A quick guide to being the best person at the table:

- Pour for others before you pour for yourself. It's the first rule of good drinking karma.
- Never correct someone's peg measure. Small, large, or Patiala - every glass has its story.
- Don't gatekeep cocktails. If someone wants whisky with Sprite, let them. They're paying for it.
- Remember names, not just orders. A friend who recalls your drink is nice. A friend who recalls your story is better.
- Keep your phone down during the first round. The bartender isn't curating this moment for Instagram, they're curating it for you.
- Ask before you finish the nibbles. Snack greed has ended more friendships than bad hangovers.
- Respect the silent drinker. Not everyone is here to shout over the bassline. Some people just like their glass more than the gossip.
- Celebrate the designated driver. They're the unsung hero of every safe night.
- Tip the bartender. They know more secrets about you than your therapist.

Thank You.

The bar at Masala Code was never imagined as a backdrop. It was built as a destination in itself a place where spirits and stories share the same shelf. Over these pages you've seen whiskies and wines, gins and rums, coffees and teas. But the real essence of this bar isn't in its listings, it's in the conversations that pour out with every glass.

We see the bar as a mirror of our philosophy: rooted in classics, restless in curiosity, open to the world but proud of where we come from. Every bottle here, whether it's Indian craft or global legend, has been chosen with intention. To celebrate tradition, to spark discovery, to invite you to stay a little longer.

So as you close this directory, know that the pages don't end here. The bar at Masala Code will always keep rewriting itself, with new bottles, new cocktails, and the same pursuit of making every drink feel like it belongs to a larger story. One that you're now a part of.

PS: If you'd like something special, a cocktail off the menu, a twist on a classic, or a drink that feels entirely your own; ask the bartender. They'll know what to do.
