ABOUT THE बार AT MASALA CODE

A bar is never just about pouring drinks. It is a gathering ground, a witness stand, a stage where stories unfold. At Masala Code, we wanted the bar to be exactly that, not a corner where you park yourself between courses, but the beating heart of the space.

Every bottle here has been chosen with intent. You'll find Indian craft spirits that are rewriting the rules of drinking, wines grown under our own sun, and whiskies that have seen generations raise a glass. Alongside them sit global names, bottles that have travelled across oceans, bringing with them the stories of distilleries and cultures far from Indore, yet somehow right at home here.

The philosophy of our kitchen is rooted in memory, but restless in execution carries forward into the bar. Our cocktails experiment with heritage, our pours honor classics, and our shelves invite curiosity. Whether you're chasing the comfort of a familiar whisky, or the thrill of a gin distilled in Goa, this bar is meant to feel like an index of possibilities.

Pull up a chair, flip through this directory, and let the night be what it wants to be; loud, quiet, celebratory, or contemplative.

The bar at Masala Code doesn't just serve drinks. It collects moments.

INDIAN स्पिरिट्स

For years, India was seen simply as a nation of drinkers, whisky loyalists, rum nostalgists, and gin-and-tonic enthusiasts shaped by colonial influence. But that overlooks a much older truth: India has always been a land of makers. Long before Scotch or Bordeaux arrived here, regions across the country were already fermenting and distilling their own spirits, toddy in the South, mahua in Central India, feni in Goa, arrack in the East, and rice beers across the Northeast. Drinking in India was always deeply regional, agricultural, and local.

What has changed in the last two decades is visibility. India has moved from being viewed as a massive consumer market to becoming a serious player in the global spirits conversation. Walk into a bar today and Indian bottles no longer carry "Made in India" apologetically, they wear it proudly. Our gins showcase Himalayan juniper, native spices, citrus, and botanicals that reflect India's landscape itself. Our vodkas are crafted with precision from Indian grains and spring water. Rum has evolved beyond nostalgia, with coastal distilleries reimagining sugarcane through terroir and tropical ageing.

And then there's Indian whisky the category leading this shift globally. Once associated with mass-market blends, Indian single malts are now winning international awards, shaped by intense monsoon ageing that creates a character entirely their own. These are no longer Indian interpretations of global spirits. They are becoming distinctly Indian styles, rooted in region, climate, and centuries of local spirit-making traditions.

The first time American whiskey entered Indian nightlife, it wasn't on a bar shelf, it was in a rock band's rider. Jack Daniel's, with its black label, became shorthand for rebellion and youth culture. Over time, bourbon's sweeter notes and rye's spice became the bartender's tools. Today, American whiskey isn't the rebel outsider anymore, it's part of the family, just the cousin who still wears leather jackets to weddings.

Norway's Linie Aquavit is a potato-based caraway spirit with a unique voyage. Every drop is loaded onto ships in oak casks and sent to cross the equator twice before being sold. The rolling seas, shifting climates, and constant temperature changes draw out deep flavors from the wood, making the ocean itself part of the recipe.

DID YOU KNOW?

At Oktoberfest, the festival officially begins only after the Mayor of Munich taps the first beer barrel open with a wooden hammer. The tradition is called "O'zapft is!" meaning "It's tapped!" in Bavarian German.

The number of hammer strikes it takes becomes a yearly talking point – fewer hits mean bragging rights. In 1950, it took 19 strikes. Some mayors have done it in just 2.

DID YOU KNOW?

White wine isn't always made from white grapes. In fact, many white wines can be produced using red grapes as long as the skins are removed early enough during the process. The colour in wine mostly comes from the grape skins, not the juice itself. Another thing most people don't realise is how much serving temperature affects flavour. When white wine is served too cold, a lot of its aromas and character stay muted. Slightly warmer temperatures allow the fruit, floral notes, and texture to open up far better in the glass.

A quick guide to being the best person at the table:

- Pour for others before you pour for yourself. It's the first rule of good drinking karma.
- Never correct someone's peg measure. Small, large, or Patiala -every glass has its story.
- Don't gatekeep cocktails. If someone wants whisky with Sprite, let them. They're paying for it.
- Remember names, not just orders. A friend who recalls your drink is nice. A friend who recalls your story is better.
- Keep your phone down during the first round. The bartender isn't curating this moment for Instagram, they're curating it for you.
- Ask before you finish the nibbles. Snack greed has ended more friendships than bad hangovers.
- Respect the silent drinker. Not everyone is here to shout over the bassline. Some people just like their glass more than the gossip.
- Celebrate the designated driver. They're the unsung hero of every safe night.
- Tip the bartender. They know more secrets about you than your therapist.
